

Condensing water heaters – the next level in efficiency

Wednesday, November 18

Condensing water heaters (boilers) are the next level in efficiency, and increasingly becoming a minimum requirement on most projects.

Join AIRAH WA division as Automatic Heating specification manager Steve Williams presents on the technical aspects of condensing water heaters: how different styles/types operate, and how they can offer great efficiency gains – even in retrofit situations.

Key requirements – such as flue systems, handling of condensate, and system design considerations – will be covered in this informative presentation. Williams will address the common pitfalls and the frequently asked questions.

With more than 35 years of experience, Williams will discuss real-life examples of issues faced daily within the industry, and reveal practical solutions to meet these concerns. He will also be available for questions, sharing his knowledge of key concepts – from installation to design. In this presentation, the transition to condensing water heaters is a painless experience.
